

1

Clara recalls with joy and excitement when she used to come in this place during Carnival days as a little kid.

2

Maria associates this square with the memory of walking with her little grandkids and buying them ice cream, they are attending university now but it seems just like yesterday, she feels very blissful about these memories.

3

Antonio spent his youth here in Bassano where with his friends loved to party and spend carefree nights (but without exaggeration), he came back 25 years later and found the place even more fascinating.

4

The most important part of Bassano for Stefano is the church, he's not catholic but when he enters there a feeling of ecstatic serenity surrounds him. He loves in particular the painting of the Virgin Mary with its peaceful aura.

Teresa and Alda are two friends and they tell us about the old tradition of market where once they sold simpler products of the land, it was also a place to meet people and to spend time together. They recall covid period when it felt oddly empty and how amazing it was to walk here again with their granddaughter.

This brochure, called "One street. A thousand memories" is the result of the work of 13 youngsters from 16 to 23 years old, who took place in an erasmus+ youth exchange in Italy in May 2021, about "Intergenerational communication".

The two associations, who worked together in this projects are Amci del Villaggio (Italy) and IRIS Fundacja (Poland).

What you will find here are the interviews this 13 youngsters have done in the street "Via S. Bassiano" in Bassano del Grappa, Italy, as a local activity. They asked elderly people, which were their memories about this street and which emotions are connected to them.
